In the ancient Hobo Codex of Palmdale Junction it sayz:

"It is a bad world out there; you can't get by on just a smile - as smiles will get you punched in the mouth, robbed and stabbed as cash is and will be king until the return of the Reptilian Overlords and the reacceptance of their Social Credit Scores in Latter Days!"

She explained:

"You must learn to be like a ninja and pick your fight(s) to those you can win regardless of the cause or fact(s)..."

She continued by taking us to the Malibu Free Beach and had us stand waist deep in the muddy, churring waters of sea

foam mixed with crude oil from the off-shore wells.

She instructed us to focus on the approaching wave (instead of the filming of a B-Movie remake of "Baywatch" that was filming at the same time.

Wanda called for each of us to dig our feet in the shifting sands and make our bodies

We followed her request without much thought and as the wave crashed into us; (to a person) we tumbled and crashed into the beach rocks as we washed ashore.

She said then:

"Try this again as I fear that you might have missed the

As the wave smashed into us, our bodies remained stationary and the wave merely rolled over our heads and proceeded on to reach the beach.

Puzzled and openingly admitting that I am not the smartest apprentice there, I asked her to explain this to me again.

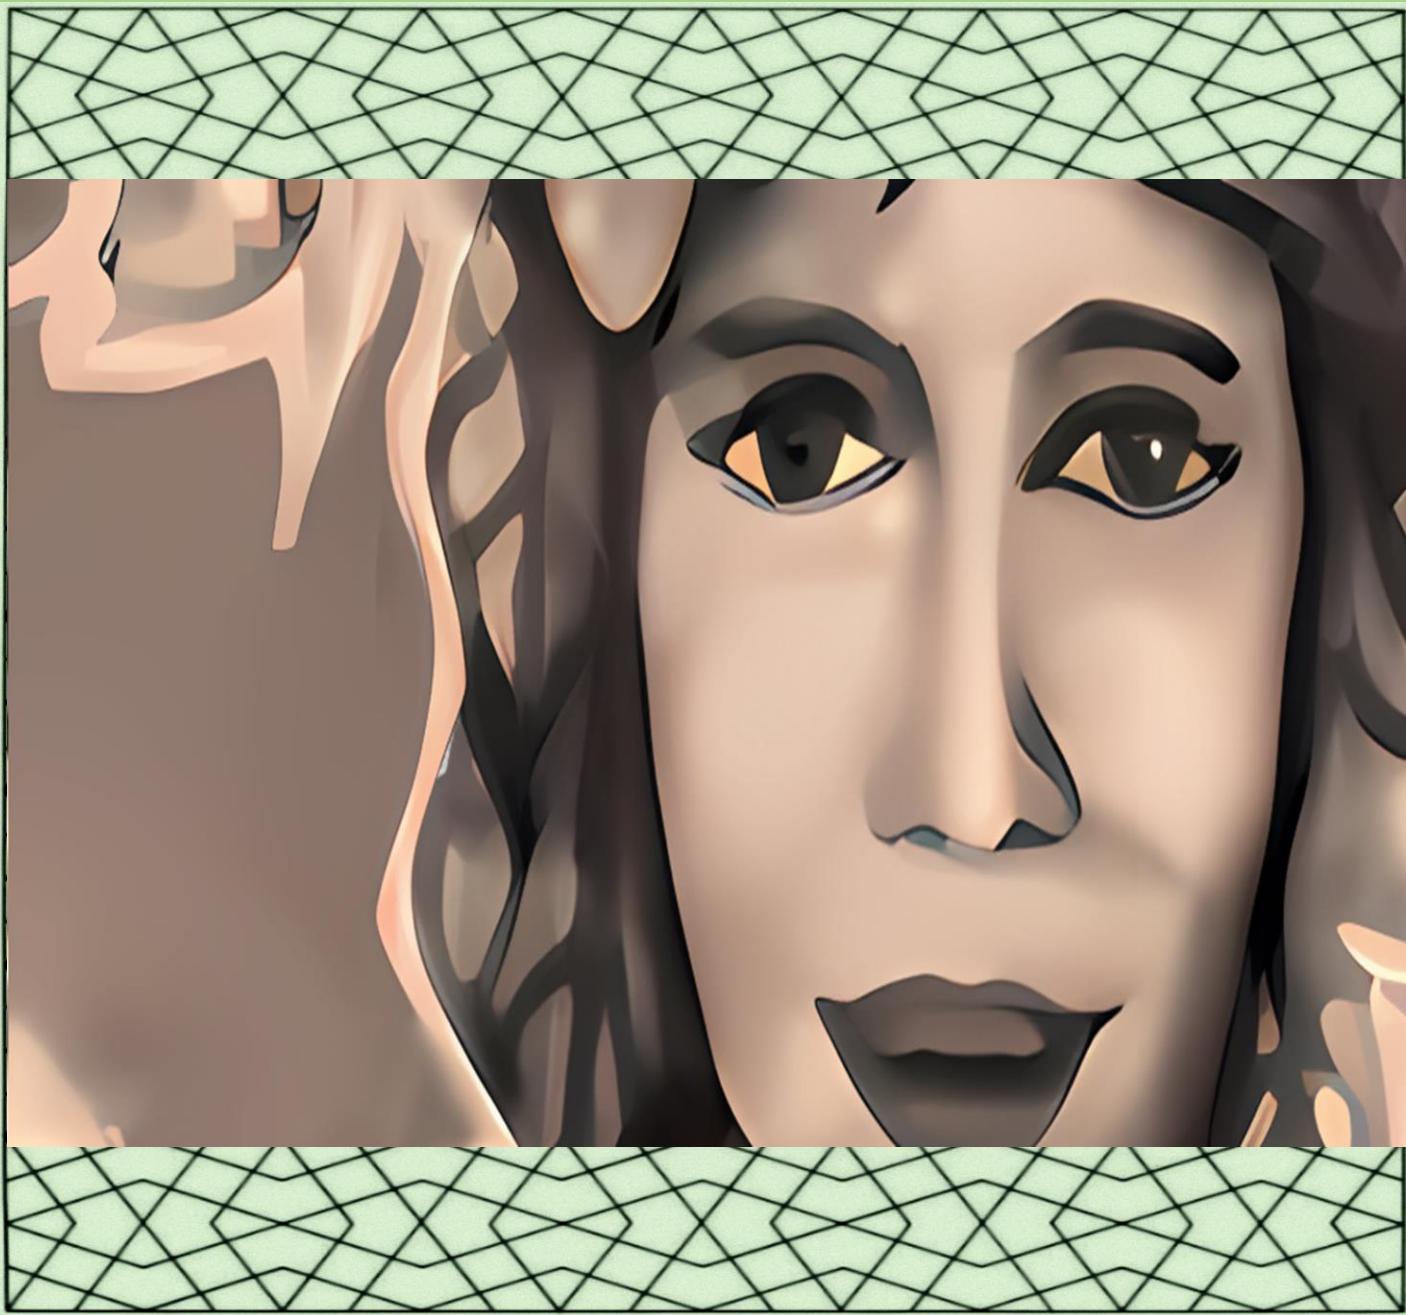

Wanda was a good teacher as she was not frazzled by the stupid kid in her class that kept repeating the same question over-and-over again.

With patience and calm, she explained that we had just become ninjas as we elected to chose our battle.

"UHHH???"

"Sometimes, it is better to just walk away than pick a fight that you can't win."

"The first time you picked to battle the wave and what happened?"

Then, I told her that I lost as the wave was stronger than I was...

Then she asked me "Why?"
"UHHH????"

"You said the wave was stronger than you and this is why you lost but, the second time, were you stronger than the wave... why?"

Thinking through her argument;

then I realized that I had chosen not to fight the wave (not that I defeated it) and that she was right in saying that sometimes, the way to victory is by not fighting fate.

Wanda paused looked around and then added the true lesson which had nothing to do with ninjas:
